

LANDSCAPE

William Gilpin

the Vicar of Boldre from 1777 to his death in 1804 wrote and illustrated a book, Remarks on Forest Scenery... that showed a fresh understanding of landscape for itself - a concept then unheard of.

Bolderwood in the 18th century

John Wise's

The New Forest was the first major work covering history, archaeology and natural history as well as the landscape. It was re-published many times - the last more than a century after it first appeared in 1863.

Maps

play a huge part in understanding the landscape. This one from Sway has been made by interpreting data from different sources.

